Pass the Pineapple Please

Karen's family was planning a vacation to the beautiful State of Hawaii. They had never been there, so they checked out books about it from the public library. They also picked up some brochures from a local travel agency.

There is so much to see and do in Hawaii that they were having a difficult time choosing. Karen's dad wanted to try surfing on the big Hawaiian waves, her mom and sister wanted to sunbathe on the beautiful beaches, and her brother couldn't wait to try snorkeling. Karen just wanted to eat fresh pineapple. It is her favorite food, and Hawaii is known for its pineapple industry.

Last night, Karen's mom added a big bowl of freshly cut pineapple to the family dinner. They were going to discuss the trip, and she wanted to create the right atmosphere. Karen didn't care about the atmosphere. She couldn't wait to dive into that bowl of delicious pineapple and scooped a big helping onto her plate.

"Slow down there," said her mother. "The rest of us would like to have some pineapple, too."

"I can't help myself," replied Karen. "Besides, I'm practicing for Hawaii."
