

Can You Kazoo?

Jennifer came home from school very excited one afternoon. Her music teacher had given each student in the class a brand new kazoo. In two weeks, on January 28, it would be National Kazoo Day, and they were going to give a kazoo concert for all the parents. She ran to tell her mother.

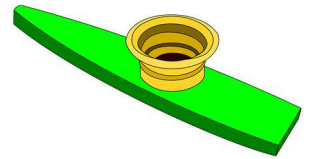

"What is a kazoo?" her mother asked.

"It's a small plastic instrument, a little bigger than a whistle, but you don't blow into it," explained Jennifer. "You hum." Then, she ran off to practice.

On the day of the concert, the auditorium was filled with parents, many of whom had never heard or seen a kazoo before. They seemed delighted as the students performed song after song. At the end of the concert, the music class had a big surprise for their parents. The students dashed through the audience, handing each guest a nice new kazoo. Then, they invited them to join in the final number. Some seemed unsure of themselves but joined in the fun anyway.

The room filled with the unique musical sound of over 100 kazoos humming "Mary Had a Little Lamb." At the end of the song, everyone laughed and clapped. The parents were happy to learn that they could kazoo? Can you kazoo?
