Let's Make Ketchup

Mom walked into the kitchen and could not believe her eyes. Smashed tomatoes and tomato juice had splattered on almost every surface. How did this happen?

Mom couldn't be sure just yet, but she had a good idea and called to her two young sons Jonas and Marco. No response. After a long silence, Mom saw two sets of eyes peeking around the doorway to the kitchen. The boys ran to their mother, grabbed her legs, and frantically began telling her how sorry they were for the mess. They talked so fast she couldn't understand them. So, she told them to calm down and then asked Jonas to explain because he was the oldest.

Well, it all started with them reading a story about Henry Heinz and his ketchup making factory. Both boys love ketchup and thought it might be fun to make their own in Mom's blender. They'd seen her make smoothies and figured ketchup would be easy. They filled the blender with fresh, whole tomatoes from the refrigerator, added some water, and then set the lid on top. Unfortunately, they didn't snap the lid on securely, and they had overfilled the blender. When Jonas hit the on-button, a volcano of tomato slush exploded. Jonas scrambled to find the off-button, but it was too late. The boys looked around to see the huge mess they had created and fled the kitchen.

Mom couldn't help it. After hearing the ridiculous tale and seeing her sons covered with tomato mush, she burst out laughing. Her sons were surprised and relieved at her reaction. All three of them had a good laugh and then started the big clean up task together.
