

Mom and Mother Goose

Annie enjoys it when her mom reads to her. Once a week, they go to the library together and check out a big pile of books. When they get back home, Annie snuggles into her mom's comfy lap, and they start reading their way through that book pile.

During yesterday's library visit, they discovered a table display all about Mother Goose Day. There were stacks of books containing nursery rhymes. Over in a cozy corner of the room, the librarian was reading some of the rhymes aloud to a small group of children. She motioned with her hand, inviting Annie to join them. Annie's mom nodded that it was okay.

When the librarian finished her selection of nursery rhymes, she encouraged the children to check out books about Mother Goose from the display table. Annie did just that. She couldn't wait to get home, climb into her mom's lap, and read some more nursery rhymes.

1. How often do Annie and her mom go to the library to check out books?

2. During their library visit in this story, they saw a display table about whom?

3. Who invited Annie to come and listen as she read nursery rhymes?

4. Did Annie follow the librarian's suggestion to check out Mother Goose books?

5. What was Annie anxious to do when she got home from the library?
