

A Sticky Situation

Collin and his classmate Patrick were busy working on a school art project. Their assigned task was to create a collage of pictures representing emotions, such as joy, sadness, fear, etc. They had all the necessary materials spread out over Collin's bedroom floor, including several bottles of glue. While the boys were intently searching through magazines, Collin's little brother William toddled quietly into the room so quietly that they didn't even notice him. William picked up one of the bottles of glue, which happened to be open, unfortunately. He tipped it over and was delighted to see a white substance come dripping out. He filled his little hand with glue and began to smear it all over his face and hair like lotion. By the time Collin and Patrick discovered what William was up to, he looked like he was wearing a white mask. The glue had also dripped on the floor and their project poster board. It was quite a mess.

"William, what are you doing?" hollered Collin.

Patrick couldn't help laughing. "Quick, get a camera," he said to Collin. "I'll take a picture of your face, and we can add another emotion to our collage, frustration."

"Very funny," replied Collin. "Now, help me clean him up."
