8. Swallows Return to Capistrano – March 19

Swallow on a Mission

Sammy the swallow was on his first scouting mission. He and several other swallows flew ahead of the flock to make sure it was safe for them to return to the San Juan Capistrano Mission in California, where the birds annually nest and feed during the spring and summer months.

Sammy was excited and getting impatient. “Where are they?” he asked.

Finally, in the distance, Sammy spied the other swallows approaching. He could hardly contain his enthusiasm and flew out to greet them.

As the energetic, little birds arrived, they quickly began rebuilding their mud nests on the ruins of the old stone church and other buildings throughout the Capistrano Valley. Centuries ago, the padres at the mission first noticed this migration pattern of the swallows. Today, the mission and its valley remain a perfect destination for the hungry birds because there is an abundance of insects for them to eat.

Sammy was proud to have served as a scout this year and just knew it would be a great summer.
