

WHAT IS THE AUTHOR'S PURPOSE?

Rabbits as Pets

Rabbits are adopted by many families. They do not need much space and require less care than a dog or cat.

They should be given water and appropriate food. They must also have a place where they can sleep and rest peacefully. If you keep it in a cage, the cage must be wide, and cleaned on a regular basis.

For the total welfare of the bunny, it must have some freedom during the day because, like any other pet, it is not good to keep it locked up all day.

These animals do not need as much company as other pets, but you should spend a little time each day with them. Rabbits are very affectionate and love to be petted.

Because they are small, they can be easily carried or held on your lap.

With proper care, a rabbit can become a new member of the family.
